ALMANAC: ROTARY AWARENESS MONTH

Millions see Rotary float each year

Rotarians first entered a float in the Rose Parade in 1927, but it was not until 1980 that the tradition became an annual one. Putting together a float is an ambitious undertaking, not least because parade rules dictate that every inch must be covered with organic materials such as flowers, fruits and vegetables, or seeds. The 121st Rose Parade in Pasadena, Calif., USA, steps off at 8 a.m. Pacific Standard Time on 1 January. With hundreds of thousands of people lining the parade route and millions more watching on television, the float is a highly visible way to promote Rotary's work. Rotary International does not fund the float; rather, the Rotary Rose Parade Float Committee receives donations from individual clubs and Rotarians. The theme of this year's Rotary float is "Service Above the Rest."
